Champion met defeat at the hands of the Nanton nine on Sunday, when their first league fixture was played. The game was full of errors throughout for the Champion nine, and at one time during the game did they register their usual style of play. The Nanton team played good ball with few errors. Score 123 Batteries:

A Moral Renaissance

In a world riven with fear and mistrust, with greed, hatred and suspicion rampant between individuals, between economic, political and social groups and between nations, there must be much inward searching of souls. Such concern of honest men in an effort to find the cause of all this strife in the hope that thereby a remedy may be found and once again nations may live in peace and people may pursue the paths of progress with hope and confidence in the future.

That there is much travail, seething and unrest at home and abroad no one can gainsay, and until some key will be found which will unlock the gate to peace and prosperity, there can be no assurance of widespread happiness and contentment.

What is at key, millions of people are asking themselves and asking one another as they view with dismay the ruffled waters of a troubled humanity?

Perhaps the answer is to be found in the statement made in the British House of Lords on March 19, 1936 by the Marquess of Salisbury, scion of the famous foreign minister of the same name in the late Victorian era, when he said:

"The cause of the world's state is not economic; the cause is moral... If I may use a phrase which is common in a great movement which is taking place in this country and elsewhere (the Oxford Group) what you want are God-guided communities which are God-guided nationalities, to make a new world. All the other forms of economic adjustments are too small to touch the centre of the evil."

If such a statement were made from the pulpit it would probably be regarded my many as more or less of a commonplace, something to be expected from such a source, but when it is made by a peer in the realm of politics and religion, as was the Marquess of Salisbury, Great Britain, it has more arresting and significant effect and serves to emphasize what might be considered a platitude if uttered by others elsewhere.

The minds of many great leaders are being directed in this channel as evident from recent utterances of other great men whose words, whether their political or economic creeds are accepted, inspire serious thought and consideration.

A similar idea was expressed about the same time by President Roosevelt of the United States when he said:

"No greater thing could come today to our land than a revival of the spirit of religion—a revival that would sweep through the homes of the nation and stir the hearts of men and women of all faiths to a reasement of the spiritual values of life. It is the religious leaders who are best fitted to bring this about."

Further testimony in support of this sentiment comes from Roger Babson, founder of the Babson Statistical organization, whose prophecies of future trends based on statistical data are regarded as authoritative over the entire world. Mr. Babson said: "I have no doubt that the world is on the way to a spiritual awakening among the people can make it endure."

These and other authorities and leaders in many countries of the world are unanimous in their opinion that before there can be a change in the national and international outlook it is essential that the viewpoint be changed and that, in effect, a moral renaissance is necessary for the national viewpoint can be none other than that of the individuals which constitute it.

It might perhaps be said: What is the use of Canadians adopting an unselfish or a lofty moral viewpoint so long as the peoples of other countries exemplify a diametrically opposed outlook? Such a restricted conception of a particular country could not serve to lay the consumption of the peace, progress and prosperity which great many desire to see. Reform and improvement must first come from within and spread outward like the ripples on the water from the cast stone.

Whether one agrees or not with the doctrines of the Oxford Group movement, one cannot but recognize that when they draw attention to the fact that there must first be a change in the individual before there can be a changed national viewpoint, they are hitting the bullseye.

'MECCA' OINTMENT

Not Given Much Credit

But Women Of Early Western Settled Their Own Land

First white woman to claim the plains of Western Canada was Marie Galbourg, who journeyed to the Red River in 1807 and later as far west as Edmonton, said E. A. Corbett, local historian, in an address at Saturday.

Talking on "Early Women of Western Canada," the speaker remarked early for traders were notably reticent in giving credit to the women who accompanied them into new lands.

Mr. Corbett referred to the wife of David Thompson, one of the west's earliest explorers. Mrs. Thompson, he said, was a half-timbered woman in a Census 1871, daughter of Patrick Small, one of the first white traders on the Churchill River.

David Thompson married the girl when she was 14 years of age, and from then on she was his constant companion.

The speaker regretted Alexander Mackenzie had little record of the part his wife played in his northern explorations.

"It is interesting to continue," he said, "to know so little of the wives of the Selkirk Setters, of such white women as the wife of Factor Rowland, who with her husband made old Fort Edmonton famous for its hospitality during the early years of the last century."

Asphalt In Petroleum

New Process May Make It Available For Paving Material

Oil wells which supply the gasoline and motor oil industries are not today as a new source of paving material over which to move them.

All petroleum contains asphalt, but much of it has not been utilized for paving because of impurities in the various types of crude oil. The asphalt is usually a solid mass of royal cutting cutter Britannia is to be sunk to support the indigency of the breakdown yard. However, engineers believe this report incorrect.

Collars Replace Riband

Holders Of Certain Decoration Must Change When Ordered

Holders of certain orders were told recently by the King that the second level of their rank at St. James' Palace. That was because the levi coincided with the birthday of Queen Mary, and notices announced it bore the footnote: "Y.E."

May 26 is the 60th day of the year.

It is laid down in court regulations that collars must not be worn after sunset, except by the King's special permission, so that they may be seen at public dinner or receptions. The collar—with the badge of the order suspended from it—was often under the shoulder straps or epauletts of uniforms, fastened with white satin bows, 1½ inches wide, at either side.

New Northern Sea Route

Navigators Of Soviet Have Made Mariners' Dreams Come True

A new sea route has been opened to navigators after three years' preparatory work. The Russian cargo vessels have succeeded in establishing a route to the Far East along the northern coast of Europe. Such a route has been the dream of mariners for centuries, though 10 years ago Nansen declared the idea to be impossible. An icebreaker fleet placed along the route has enabled the cargo ships to pass through 100 ships of the Soviet mercantile marine have this winter sailed along this roof of the world without a single mishap. Five radio stations keep vessels informed of weather and ice conditions.

Get Practical Training

High School In Jacksonville, Florida, Has Practical Plan

In Jacksonville, Florida, high school boys and girls are getting training for future jobs in the community at the same time they attend school. They go to school part of the day and the other part, not spend the day in school, are working office, broadcasting station, theatre, hotel, teacoom, telephone office, learning practical work right on the job. Since the opening of the school in September, more than two years ago, 86 per cent of the vocational pupils have secured jobs upon graduation and the plan is spreading to other cities of the south and west. The majority of students are high school boys and girls who did not go to college, yet their training is directed toward that goal. When they apply for a job, the employer asks: "What can you do?" The answer is, "I don't know, but I can try." The boy goes to work and gradually says: "I have had two years' experience in a bank," or in an automobile parts shop, or any other of the 43 different types of training posts available in the community.—Christian Science Monitor.

Need More Scholarships

More Opportunity Required For Bright Students Without Means

Dr. R. C. Wallace, newly-appointed principal of Queen's University, was at Ottawa this week to demand scholarships for her students.

Dr. Wallace, a graduate of the University of Alberta, succeeds Dr. W. Hamilton Pyke, who accepted principalship of Aberdeen University.

It should be possible for a student to receive a scholarship based on mental ability to go sight through school and college, said Dr. Wallace.

Regarding positions for university graduates, Dr. Wallace said: "People today are realizing that and more, the importance of trying to help the trained person and many businessmen are recognizing this and doing all that lies in their power to prevent the trained person from becoming unemployed."

"Sports have a real value in their correct place," he said. "We must remember that students do not go to the university for sports. That is not why universities were founded."

Harry Whitney, Of New York, Dies At Hospital

Harry Whitney, of New York, noted explorer and big game hunter, died in hospital at Montreal recently. He was born in 1873.

1899 and 1910 he was a member of the expedition of the north pole.

Dr. Whitney had gone north with Admiral Peary and in 1899 both Admiral Peary and Dr. Frederick Cook returned from the Arctic with claims and Doubt was cast on Dr. Cook's claims, and Mr. Whitney entered the controversy. He said he had gone hunting while with the Peary expedition and met Dr. Cook, who left instructions about the effects with which Whitney cashed.

He said Peary took to protect them aboard his vessel, the Rooster.

When the controversy broke it was intimated Mr. Whitney had destroyed Cook's records or had purposely left them behind. Mr. Whitney made only one statement, that Dr. Cook had told him of reaching the north pole and had sworn him to secrecy.

Mr. Whitney returned to the Arctic in three successive summers and continued to be a member of parties which went to the Arctic with Bartlett until 1930.

Reproduction Of Old Shop

Merchandise Of Century Ago Shown In New York

An American millionaire 100 years ago made a pair of silk stockings for Queen Victoria. They are on exhibition in a Fifth Avenue, New York shop, with proceeds going to the Fresh Air Fund. The shop is a reproduction of the stock shop in 1847, and is furnished with counter desks, a safe and a stove, some of which were used in the last century. Merchandise of 100 years ago is displayed.

Among the attractions on exhibition are the embroidered silk wedding hose worn by a bride in 1847 and a pearl and goldleaf handbag made from a bribe's robe in the 16th century.

May Live In Palestine

Halli Selassie Is Considering Palace On Mount Olivet

A palace on the Mount of Olives by an Italian prince in exile may become the permanent home of Emperor Haile Selassie.

Halli Selassie, who fled before the Italian armies, may make his residence in the Kaiser Wilhelm Palace in Berlin, or in Kaiser Wilhelm II., his wife, the Empress Augusta Victoria, after their visit to Jerusalem at the end of the last century, it was reported. At that time Palestine was part of the Turkish Empire.

The Negus recently visited the palace, which is now a monastery.

SYNOPSIS

The story opens with Link Fleming addressing a meeting of Boone County's cattlemen, all together with the exception of the Fleming family company.

The meeting terminates, but Helen Hamilton and her sister, Helen Link and Kilgo stay behind, and Helen asks Fleming to tell them of his business plan. This angers Buzz, who accuses Fleming of trying to influence the men. By this time, his "spread," Buzz shoots at Fleming in an uncontrollable burst, but fails to hit him. Link's foreman is shot in the stomach, and Fleming is sentenced to three years' imprisonment.

Buzz Hamilton arrives back in Rawhide while Fleming and Helen are in the bank getting a loan to pay off the damages he caused to the dam. Roper Kilgo and Jackpot Mell meet, and Mell goes to see Helen with them. By this time, his sister and Link come from the bank. Buzz has been released, and he has distorted the facts concerning the dam proposal to Buzz, making it appear that he was the one to shoot him. Buzz, inflamed by liquor and anger, tries to shoot Fleming, but is shot himself. He goes to the hospital, and tells Fleming he has appeared and tells Fleming that he has obtained the gun that had been obtained from the bank.

On their arrival home, there were a number of Link's workmen who told Fleming that there was a strike at the dam, and that the men were demanding double their regular wages. They told him of the robbery and promised that they would assist him.

Fleming, Mell and Jackpot

Mell making trouble among his workmen, and others down the river. They planned to burn the dam. Roper Kilgo and Buzz avenge, Mell telling Fleming to carry his gun with him. Mell goes to the dam the next time they meet.

Helen, who has given up trying to make the power attorney give him to manage the Triple H. He argues that he is too old to do such a big job, but his way to help him get back his self-respect and social standing. Link sends him to the hospital, and Mell refuses, and tells Buzz his sister's rights are protected, and that if he goes to the hospital, the dam agreement gets the whole of the property. Hamilton then smashes Fleming's car, and Mell and Jackpot try to shoot him. Link knocks Buzz to recover, and then leaves.

Later, as he was riding towards the dam, Fleming is shot by a couple of men whom he recognises as Kilgo and Buzz. That he goes towards the dam. He hears a series of small explosions, and finds the dam to find there has been a land slide and two of his workmen are injured.

(Now Go On With The Story)

A tiny muscle moved in her smooth cheek. "Yes," came the low answer.

"I know he is. But—practically."

"There has to be a way!" He lost of those words several days ago. Honestly, Helen, I'm sure Buster didn't!"

He stopped with the sudden realization that it was hopeless to protest further. An ominous change had come over the girl. For an instant Link studied her sullen countenance while they fought black destino. In the end, he plucked up his plaudits: "What's the matter, Helen? Why do you think I don't treat Buster right?" He broke off suddenly, and then—tunred half away. "Kilgo's put in some of his work around here—I'm not too blind to see that. Talked smooth, I suppose. Why don't you ask him for proof of what he says?"

"Link, I—I think you have better go."

Coming in a low, burly tone, he would made him whirl back to face her. "Why do you want to dissolve our partnership? Look here," he added almost roughly, "don't you love me?"

The girl moved a little distance away and stood with slim fingers touching her lips while she stared pensively at the heat-shimmering prairie. "I don't know."

He stiffened, turned to her again, with that responsibility, and then he had been stung by her words.

"I have to take care of Buzz. I have to, Link! Father charged me with that responsibility, and I have to take care of him."

"Oh, don't you see?" she wailed, her hands clutching a little case from her chesterfield. "I don't like to say it, but I've decided that . . ."

Helen stopped and determinedly sought a new tack. "It's Roper Kilgo who has influenced me."

"You should have let him parole; you should have let Roper get a pardon for him. Oh, I appreciate what you tried to do, but I see now it didn't help. Buzz'll be here again, and he'll be worse than ever."

The girl quivered. "All I can say is that could not be more careful of dynamics. You think under Buzz, but he does feel close to you. It's him who has influence over him, and now that you deliberately turned Buzz against you, Roper has all the fault when felas get hurt."

Link faced the man with eyes blazing quick anger. Kilgo was fully aware and angry, too. He checked contemplatively and then he staggered toward Helen, flushed a last admonition over his shoulder.

"Save the gunplay till you meet Jackpot Mell. He's the one you're after. When he comes, he'll be here to see you again."

"I don't understand what he said in a choking whisper that seemed to plunge like a knife through the owner of the Star Loop. "I can't let Buzz go away—forever!"

There was long, tame silence.

Link flushed, his eyes fastened on the ground, "if you want to dissolve the marriage, then do it. All's right. You can do that, Helen. But as far as you and I are concerned, we'll just have to drop it."

"You don't seem to understand! Buzz thinks I ought to—that I ought not see you again. He threatens to go away, and I'm afraid he means he'll turn out—but, I can't allow it. Don't you see? He's my brother and I must take care of him! He would become, eventually, like Saks Tomyay was. Just a saloon hand, I'm afraid."

A shudder traversed her graceful figure standing there in sunlight, with the tawny mass of hair glistening acutely. Slowly, however, her head bowed, and she arched her brows and swallowed, but the leaden lump in her throat would not move.

"—and if you—if you and I—married—he wouldn't like it. He forbids it. I'd never see Buzz again."

His impulse was to sweep her into his arms, but he thought of nothing to say, so the pair went on in silence. For a moment, he thought he might be held for ransom, but he had been held, and the leaden heart could be seen as he stared back from the cab window of the sighing locomotive. The fireman perched atop the first car knuckled ash from his pipe and began to climb a bridle.

A bridle, he thought, the conductor ended their discussion of personal matters and walked between pens and cars, the last steel was produced unwillingly, and the tracks the last dawd was a going along.

Within the pens cow punchers left posts they had maintained during the early morning hours and climbed through the fence, seeking for a good place before which to stand.

A man who tended a huge pot of steaming coffee. The job was done; Triple H and Star Loop steers were loaded and soon would be on the way to the principal beef market of the country.

Link Fleming rubbed hot, dust-stung eyes and lifted his sombrely to allow fresh air over his thick dark hair. He directed his horse toward the station, and the last of the day was spent waiting for the train to start for Maryville, Ralph Moore the telegrapher, and Waco Byrnes. "Howdy, boys," he greeted. "Everything O.K.?"

They nodded, and Byrnes spoke.

"Then you're not going to marry me, I suppose?" he said heavily. "It's Kilgo?"

"I'm glad you're right. Link, I'm sorry to tell you, Helen," he said slowly, in deep earnestness, "that I love you. Reckon I always will. Anyhow, I'll always have that to feel good about."

Link stepped forward and walked toward his ground-reined mustang. He lifted ed one booted foot, inserted it in the stirrup, and summoned energy to raise his weight into the saddle.

Around the corner of the ranch building swept a horseman, florid of face, with dark bushy brows and an expression of habitual aggressiveness. His barrel-like chest, bulging with a powerful physique, and the out-thrust of his large under jaw told of a man accustomed to having his own way by persuasion or force—but hardly by it.

"Wal!" Roper Kilgo jerked his mount to a skidding stop and dropped to the ground. His heavy eyes travelled in swift appraisal from Link to Helen. Hamilton, paused appreciatively at sight of her little figure. Plain to view was the odor of liquor as Kilgo hiccuped slightly under his breath.

"You two had a little talk, huh?" he asked, leaning toward her and a wide, decisive grin on his bushy countenance. "I suppose you told him you're through with 'em for good, Helen?"

"I'm satisfied wordlessly.

Kilgo grimaced. "Nice of yuh to invite me to supper," he remarked for Link's benefit. Buzz'll be here right—stopped to talk to one of your rams," Fleming said. "I suppose you can't stay here, but I have to hurry to see them guys that the hell diggin' yore famous Fleming's Folly? Yuh ought to be more careful of dynamics."

He went on with a patronizing second time. "I've been carless with the course, it's always more or less the bone's fault when felas get hurt."

Link faced the man with eyes blazing quick anger. Kilgo was fully aware and angry, too. He checked contemplatively and then he staggered toward Helen, flushed a last admonition over his shoulder.

"Save the gunplay till you meet Jackpot Mell. He's the one you're after. When he comes, he'll be here right now. It's gonna be slow as sin when yuh meet in Rawhide!" Provided yuh got nerve to go there. But if Jackpot doesn't finish yuh off," he ended, as if it was sheer improbability, "mebbe it will!"

CHAPTER XVI

Holmes Junction was a blot of thick dust kicked up by milling, suspicious steers as the promoter of Fleming's Folly brought his team of horses home trudging easily through the brilliant morning sunshines. Shipping port for all of western Boone County, the Junction consisted of a single street, a telegraph station, a side tracks a water tank, and an elaborate mesh of cattle pens which at some long previous date had been white.

Now Holmes was showing swirls of grey and sand, the tattered remnants of his coat torn out—badly. I can't allow it. Don't you see? He's my brother and I must take care of him! He would become, eventually, like Saks Tomyay was. Just a saloon hand, I'm afraid."

A shudder traversed her graceful figure standing there in sunlight, with the tawny mass of hair glistening acutely.

Slowly, however, her head bowed, and she arched her brows and swallowed, but the leaden lump in her throat would not move.

"—and if you—if you and I—married—he wouldn't like it. He forbids it. I'd never see Buzz again."

His impulse was to sweep her into his arms, but he thought of nothing to say, so the pair went on in silence. For a moment, he thought he might be held for ransom, but he had been held, and the leaden heart could be seen as he stared back from the cab window of the sighing locomotive.

The fireman perched atop the first car knuckled ash from his pipe and began to climb a bridle.

A bridle, he thought, the conductor ended their discussion of personal matters and walked between pens and cars, the last steel was produced unwillingly, and the tracks the last dawd was a going along.

Within the pens cow punchers left posts they had maintained during the early morning hours and climbed through the fence, seeking for a good place before which to stand.

A man who tended a huge pot of steaming coffee. The job was done; Triple H and Star Loop steers were loaded and soon would be on the way to the principal beef market of the country.

Link Fleming rubbed hot, dust-stung eyes and lifted his sombrely to allow fresh air over his thick dark hair. He directed his horse toward the station, and the last of the day was spent waiting for the train to start for Maryville, Ralph Moore the telegrapher, and Waco Byrnes. "Howdy, boys," he greeted. "Everything O.K.?"

They nodded, and Byrnes spoke.

"Then you're not going to marry me, I suppose?" he said heavily. "It's Kilgo?"

"I'm glad you're right. Link, I'm sorry to tell you, Helen," he said slowly, in deep earnestness, "that I love you. Reckon I always will. Anyhow, I'll always have that to feel good about."

Link stepped forward and walked toward his ground-reined mustang. He lifted ed one booted foot, inserted it in the stirrup, and summoned energy to raise his weight into the saddle.

"Save the gunplay till you meet Jackpot Mell. He's the one you're after. When he comes, he'll be here right now. It's gonna be slow as sin when yuh meet in Rawhide!" Provided yuh got nerve to go there. But if Jackpot doesn't finish yuh off," he ended, as if it was sheer improbability, "mebbe it will!"
